

Ethiopia, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda Use Science and Technology to Boost Agricultural Productivity

- Across Sub-Saharan Africa, the agriculture sector is under-performing
- Four east African countries – Ethiopia, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda – are collaborating to marshal the power of science and tackle common problems facing farmers
- A new video documents the East Africa Agricultural Productivity Program and its sub-regional approach to boosting the quantity and quality of food produced by farmers

Ethiopia, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda Use Science and Technology to Boost Agricultural Productivity [1]

Source URL: <https://www.asareca.org/publication/ethiopia-kenya-tanzania-and-uganda-use-science-and-technology-boost-agricultural>

Links

[1] <http://www.worldbank.org/en/news/feature/2014/07/10/ethiopia-kenya-tanzania-and-uganda-use-science-and-technology-to-boost-agricultural-productivity/>